

CONTRIBUTORS

Chinmoy Banerjee is retired from the Department of English, Simon Fraser University. He is the founding president of South Asian Film Education Society and president of South Asian Network for Secularism and Democracy, both in Vancouver.

Lesley Battler knows a little too much about the petrochemical industry. “Tender Carbon” is part of an extended work entitled “Endangered Hydrocarbons,” which mixes found texts with oil and gas vernacular to reveal the absurdity of production language.

Michael Boughn’s most recent book is Cosmographia, a post-Lucretian faux micro-epic (BookThug, 2010.) Together with Victor Coleman, he edited Robert Duncan’s The H.D. Book for University of California Press. His now nameless but soon to be retitled detective novel (the book formerly known as Business As Usual) will be published by NeWest.

Clint Burnham teaches at Simon Fraser University. Poems have recently appeared in The Capilano Review, Westwind Review, the tyee.ca, and Smalls.

Jasmine Johnston is a Master’s student in English at the University of Victoria, pursuing studies in Pacific poetics.

Donato Mancini is author of Ligatures (2005), Æthel (2007) and the forthcoming Buffet World (New Star) and Fact ‘n’ Value (Projectile). “The Young Hate Us {1}: Can Poetry Be Matter?” will be part of the critical apparatus of The Last Visual Poetry Anthology, edited by Nico Vassilakis and Crag Hill.

Rob Manery is the author of It’s Not As If It Hasn’t Been Said Before (Tsunami Editions, 2001).

Robert Prey is a PhD student in the School of Communication, Simon Fraser University. His research interests include the political economy of transnational communication with a focus on East Asia, social theory, and urban space.

Pat Smith is a Canadian writer who likes open dialogue.

Mandy Woo aspires to be like those whom she admires. She is interested in Canadian Literature and is currently an Honours student in the Department of English at The University of British Columbia.